

Former Manhunt Man of The Week: “I’m HIV-Positive”

World AIDS Day may be far behind us, but that doesn’t mean we should all pack up our red ribbons and forget about HIV awareness. People are still living with HIV. There’s still stigma against those people living with HIV. To make matters worse, people continue to spread misinformation about HIV.

Our job isn’t done yet. With that said, you might be asking to yourself, “How can I solve this problem? Donate money to an AIDS charity? Volunteer at a clinic? Get tested? Know and disclose my status? Communicate with my partner(s)?”

Yes, all of those are good things! But here’s an idea to start with—stop being suck a dick to people living with HIV.

We received an e-mail from a young man named Rory. You might otherwise recognize him by the name of JelloSlapper, a former Manhunt Man of The Week and our fourth place finisher in the Man of The Year countdown.

With the support of AIDS Calgary, Rory has started a new video series to promote awareness and share his experience as a 23 year-old man living with HIV.

- Dewitt

Article found on www.manhunt.com: <http://manhuntedaily.com/2012/01/former-manhunt-man-of-the-week-im-hiv-positive/> retrieved 01/25/2012